How did Denver Construction Group start?

In the late 1940's in West Virginia, Chancey & Sons started as a carpet and upholstery cleaning company headed by Mr. & Mrs. Chancey. Their son, Jim Chancey, learned the secrets to the trade and expanded the company to Colorado. Once in Colorado, Chancey & Sons started a property restoration division. Greg Chancey, Jim Chancey's son, saw this division as a separate entity and started All Dry in the early 1990's. Today, both companies are known as one entity, Chancey Enterprises, and are under the same roof and working together on property restoration and reconstruction services.

In 2009, Travis Chancey, Jim Chancey's younger son & Greg Chancey's brother, envisioned a reconstruction division to accompany All Dry and started Denver Construction Group. Now Greg and Travis Chancey work together as President and Vice President of All Dry and Denver Construction Group. They envision Chancey Enterprises as a unique restoration powerhouse with two companies, All Dry and Denver Construction Group, affiliated in the same office with Chancey & Sons – the founding company that started in 1947 by their Grandparents.

Who is Denver Construction Group?

Denver Construction Group's highly skilled project managers are adept at providing the property owner the most complete expeditious solution possible to restore the property to its pre-loss condition or make requested improvements. The Denver Construction Group Project Manager facilitates accurate and thorough damage assessment, claims facilitation and overall coordination of resources to immediately begin the restoration process and successfully restore the facility from loss.

Our Project Managers take an experienced approach with owners and their property when working with the effects of a disaster by working carefully with disaster victims to reduce stress, facilitate restoration and offer suggestions on how to minimize loss and down-time. Our team also works closely with insurance companies to expedite the loss to recovery process, immediately working to get your property back to normal or better as soon as possible.
